You can also preview the creation of an image frame in a floating window. When you create an image frame or a graphic frame, the frame includes the space where the finished image will be inserted. You use images or frames to create a new background for your new image, so you can use the frames in addition to, or instead of, any existing background you might have created. After you create an image frame and insert an image, you can preview it in two ways. You can preview the new image in the frame or launch an image window for that new image. * Preview image: The default, or primary, way to preview an image frame is to preview the frame in its own window, which enables you to maintain your original workspace. That way, you don't need to switch to a separate window to view the image frame after you insert the image. * Quick view image frame: You can also preview an image frame in the Quick View window, which makes the frame appear as a thumbnail image in the bottom-left corner of the Quick View window and enables you to quickly view your images. In addition, Quick View enables you to add multiple images to a single frame. ## Creating Image Frames You can create an image frame in several ways: * Select the image frame tool. Click the Frame tool (or press the F key) on the Tools panel. * Use the frame button. Click the Rectangular Frame icon on the toolbar or press Shift+F. You can also create an image frame using any of the frame controls on the Control panel — as described later in this chapter. The tools and options found on the Frame tool

m*~ = 0.01) and non-vitrified embryos compared to that of serum and the presence of zona pellucida \[[@B40-ijms-20-01617]\]. After 10 min of thawing, the T~c~ of warmed vitrified oocytes is significantly lower than that of fresh oocytes \[[@B41-ijms-20-01617]\]. In addition, it is easy to underestimate the total loss of vitrified oocytes and embryos due to inaccurate T~m~ measurements. There is a dose--response relationship between T~m~ measurement error and the level of cryoinjury. In other words, measurement error may have a greater impact on low-vitrified-concentration vitrified-thawed embryo \[[@B42-ijms-20-01617]\]. T~m~ determination in clinical practice is mainly based on the calculation of real-time software or manual calculation, which may be prone to errors in operation and require the use of complex equipment. Over long periods, the relevance of changing equipment to ensure optimal results remains to be determined. The use of validated algorithms, such as MATLAB, excel, and Visual Basic, may overcome some of the current challenges regarding T~m~ determination. 4. Conclusions {#sec4-ijms-20-01617} =============== The results of this study revealed that the use of a validated algorithm was effective and reliable for the determination of T~m~ in relation to the developing stage of human zygotes. In the early stages of pregnancy, in which the zygote has a high rate of growth, the T~m~ value is in the range of 40--50 °C. T~m~ is not a direct index of embryo development, but in combination with other indicators, it can be used as a simple method for evaluating embryo quality and viability. Competitive Ads Will Also Lose In iOS 14 Google is first to drop its ad block (or an ad blocker, if you like) after Apple has already started blocking competitors a few months ago Apple's iOS 13 and Google's Android P don't have ads, only a limited collection of them in the app. For those who don't know, iOS 13 does not have ads on the mobile device. Ever since the release of iOS 11, Apple has been making devices without ads, which means that the cost of the maintenance of the software will be saved. While Apple does not refer to the lack of ads as an "adblock", since the word is reserved for anti-virus, there are nonetheless a number of companies that are making apps like Edge Browser, uBlock, and others that try to emulate this function. The goal is to adapt to the environment of iOS 13, ie, offer the same user experience as the native software, without losing the interface through its use. Google is doing an about turn. Starting today, the company will begin to remove the ads in its apps as much as possible, under pressure from Apple. "With the free Google Play and Google Store apps, Google has a number of apps like Google Camera, YouTube, Google Maps, Gmail, and Gmail Offline, among others. "With this change, Google will discontinue advertising in its free apps that are available for download on the Google Play Store. This transition will occur within the next year," reads a statement published on the official page of Google Play. This affects all the apps that have ads, although it is not clear how much. Indeed, the complete version of Google Play, Google Play Movies & TV, Google Play Newsstand, YouTube Kids, and others will have ads in the future. On the other side, Google's native apps will be the most affected, as in Android P, the company will no longer offer ads in the official apps. "Over the last few years, we have continued to invest heavily in our apps to give our users a great experience," explains Amit Fulay, VP of engineering for products at Google in a statement. "With the release of Android 9 Pie, we also announced that we would no longer offer ads in our official apps, for example, Google Play Movies & TV, YouTube and Gmail.
