A female infant with generalized progeroid changes had retarded psychomotor development from early infancy. Despite short stature, she did not show the typical short telomeres of Hutchinson-Gilford progeria syndrome. There was a family history of mental retardation and short stature. Genetic analysis showed a homozygous deletion of two nucleotides (CA) in exon 1 of the LMNA gene. The clinical features of this patient are consistent with those of autosomal recessive congenital progeroid syndrome. However, the short telomeres, despite the LMNA gene mutation, might be a distinctive sign of Hutchinson-Gilford progeria syndrome.Lymphoma in the mediastinum: a comparative experience at two hospitals. A total of 157 patients with lymphoma (non-Hodgkin's lymphoma/NHL) of the mediastinum treated in a single institution from 1952 to 1987 were studied. The presenting manifestations of disease included fever (86%), chest pain (29%), cough (24%), weight loss (21%), and dyspnea (16%). The histologic types were large cell, small cell, and Hodgkin's disease. Overall, 84% of all patients required supportive care only. R-CHOP chemotherapy was reserved for a subgroup of patients with bulky disease who were asymptomatic. The
