Mounts ISO images and runs them as a.MDF CD Effect of insulin detemir and rosiglitazone on glycemia control and risk of hypoglycemia in patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus: a meta-analysis of randomized trials. Type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM) is a common chronic disorder that is associated with significant morbidity and mortality. The importance of good glycemic control in reducing diabetes-related complications has been well documented. To compare the effects of insulin detemir (ID) and rosiglitazone (RGZ) on glycemic control and risk of hypoglycemia. Randomized, controlled, parallel-group clinical trials were considered for inclusion if they compared ID or RGZ with either placebo or another active comparator for patients with T2DM. Literature databases were searched in March 2007. Only publications in English or Spanish, and which were peer-reviewed were used. Summary estimates were generated for HbA(1c), fasting plasma glucose (FPG), and postprandial plasma glucose (PPG). Relative risks were also estimated for overall hypoglycemia and nocturnal hypoglycemia for ID and RGZ. Random-effects meta-analyses were performed and heterogeneity of effect between trials was evaluated. Fourteen randomized, controlled, parallel-group trials were identified. The ID group showed a larger reduction in HbA(1c) versus the placebo or glimepiride groups (-1.50% [95% CI, -1.88, -1.11]). The RGZ group had a larger reduction in FPG than the placebo or glipizide groups (-1.48 mg/dL [95% CI, -1.79, -1.17]). However, no significant differences were found in PPG or in the incidence of hypoglycemia. Insulin detemir and RGZ both significantly improved glycemia control and were as safe and effective in reducing the incidence of hypoglycemia when compared with placebo or another active comparator. ID had a smaller effect on HbA(1c) and FPG than RGZ, but both drugs were as effective as one another in reducing PPG. During the production of cigarettes, it is often necessary to apply an insulating coating to one or both of the
