A study on the incidence of benign mesenchymal tumors in the soft tissue of the foot in 250 cases. In a prospective study over 6 years we studied 250 patients with benign soft tissue tumors. Of these, a total of 290 benign soft tissue tumors of the foot (distal tarsal and metatarsal bones), including 37 cases with malignant tumors, were treated. All benign mesenchymal tumors were divided into 9 groups: benign tendon sheath tumors (including 7 myositis ossificans), synovial cysts, lipomas, neurofibromas, giant cell tumors, benign soft tissue tumor, ganglion cysts, emoliments and perineuriomas. The incidence of benign mesenchymal tumors in the soft tissue of the foot was calculated in each part of the foot and in each group of benign soft tissue tumors. We also studied the results of radiological examinations of these tumors and the treatment.

The group with the highest incidence of tumors were neurofibromas (63 cases in 250), followed by ganglion cysts (36 cases). The tumors were most often located in the dorsum of the foot (58.7%). In comparison with the other groups, myositis ossificans occurred most often in the tendons of the metatarsophalangeal joint. The majority of tumors were removed by simple curettage. We propose using the following categories for benign soft tissue tumors of the foot: benign tendon sheath tumors, lipomas, neurofibromas, ganglion cysts, and myositis ossificans. The present invention relates to the use of at least two dimensional poly-ether-type polymeric ionomers as a coating for an associated adsorbent material such as activated carbon or the like. The prior art has been concerned with the possibility of coating various substrates with synthetic polymers including ionomers. Since at least the mid 1970's

Q: In any sufficiently large perfect square pyramid, how many are of equal volume? Any larger the pyramid, there are more sides, so that the volume of any size of square is  $\frac{1}{4^n}$ . Thus, the volume of any pyramid is  $\frac{1}{4^n}$ . Note that the mass of a pyramid of height  $h$  is  $\frac{h^3}{12}$  (by the "displacement theorem"). It follows that for any pyramid  $h$ , the total volume of all pyramids of height  $h$  is  $\frac{h^3}{12}$ . Similarly, the total mass of all pyramids of height  $h$  is  $\frac{h^3}{4}$ . Thus, the total volume of all pyramids is  $\frac{h^3}{12} + \frac{h^3}{4}$ . That total volume is simply twice the volume of a pyramid of height

$h$ , i.e.,  $\frac{h^3}{12}$ . So the problem reduces to counting the number of equal-volume pyramids of height  $h$ . We suppose that a pyramid of height  $h$  is a perfect square pyramid with square base of height  $h$ , having square slabs resting on the base. Questions (1) Say that  $n$  is the number of sides of the perfect square pyramid of height  $h$ . How do we count the number of pyramids of height  $h$  that are of equal volume? (2) If we insist that  $n$  is odd, how do we count the number of pyramids of height  $h$  that are of equal volume? A: 1. Say  $n$  is the number of sides of the perfect square pyramid of height  $h$ . How do we count the number of pyramids of height  $h$  that are of equal volume? The proof is based on counting the number of slabs of the perfect square pyramid. The idea is to note that once there is one slab, at most the other  $n - 1$  slabs must be of the
