Try using the table of contents below to find a particular article.As the Jets get ready for the draft and free agency, a lot of the focus has been placed on the offensive side of the ball. I think it's safe to say that the defensive side of the ball has gotten a lot less attention. For that, I blame the Jets organization. As it stands, the Jets have the most glaring needs on defense: a pass rusher, a slot cornerback, and a strong safety. You could argue that the run defense is equally as bad as the pass defense, but the Jets are rolling the dice that some combination of Calvin Pace, Demario Davis, and Marcus Cooper can fill the void. The Jets seem to like Pernell McPhee and have shown interest in him, but his contract demands are very high. That means that the Jets will likely have to give up multiple picks to land him. Then again, he's only a 30-year old defensive lineman who's never played a position of need. I'm going
