I've tried to be objective and unbiased as I have gone through this process. But, I guess that kind of goes out the window as soon as you commit to buy a property for $1.5 million. But, the idea of limiting the spending was: 1) More gives us the ability to bid higher 2) More spending time with the property gives us the ability to see how to invest our money to make more money and 3) More gives us the ability to make and justify the trade-off between money and time. After having done this exercise, I guess that money still matters. Maybe I was just dreaming up at $1.5 million. But, I don't think so. After all, no one truly knows what's going to happen. But I do think that there is a benefit to choosing more. And, maybe I was just dreaming at $1.5 million. But, I don't think so. After all, no one truly knows what's going to happen. But I do think that there is a benefit to choosing more. But, one thing is certain... We know that money does not necessarily make the world go around. So, we might as well spend it for the things that matter the most, like spending time with our loved ones and improving our lifestyle. Ultimately, I want my home to have elegance, longevity, and timelessness. We all want these things, and these are qualities that have nothing to do with the cost. But, it is a great challenge to see that these qualities are not just found in expensive properties. 3 Comments Connect with us "We are not like most other real estate companies. The aim of this blog post is to create an simple PHP application to validate the correctness of User's input (Variables which are used to for validation should be highlighted in color like RED). User is not forced to enter the values, the validation will be done only when it is requested. Here's a sample user interaction: User enters his Password with his valid email id. This is now validated in db table. In case of success user should be prompted to login to access his profile. If the login fails then he should get the error message. In case of failure a validation error should be shown. Such an application is quite useful as it will highlight the user-defined variables. Also, as error messages are shown the User can easily understand the cause of error. The configuration for the application will be defined in a separate XML file which can be loaded (XML File), or simply copied (Code Snippet), to make the app portable. PACKAGE_DIR is the directory which contains the package.xml file. Add class name (e.g. User_Vellus) to the constructor (remember "The constructor will be called only once." This is the main code for the application and the only important code for the application is INSERT VALUE statement. If an error is found in INSERT VALUE statement then get_error will return the error. In this case a message has been set in the message variable. This variable can be used to pass the error message to an external function or to update the error message in the form. Notice that all other statements, such as the GET values from the form are given to _validate_form_method, which is shown in the screen shot above. In this case the variable $type is set to 0 as it is not a required field. If $type=1 then type is required as it's required field. Then, if $type=2, $name is required. If $type=3, then $first_name and $email are required. This is for the validation of inputs. There are numerous ways to validate the inputs using PHP. This article gives a basic step-by-step tutorial on how to build a
