* The best place to find tutorial videos to get started with Photoshop is at www.youtube.com. When you're starting out, the first thing you want to do is open a new document, called a blank canvas. If you've ever used software such as PaintShop Pro or Corel PaintShop Pro, you've opened a blank canvas document. To do so in Photoshop, open the File menu and then choose New. In the dialog box that appears, select Blank Document. A new document has been created and opened. Your first task is to rename it. An important part of image editing is maintaining good naming conventions. Make sure that you'll always be able to identify exactly what you've done to an image — in other words, maintaining a "mental record" of what you've done to an image. For example, you might save a document as `LMB.PSD`. This file contains a layer mask of LMB and the current image. Each time you rename this file, you should specify what you've changed. In this case, if you were to rename the file to `LMBNew.PSD`, it would contain a second layer mask of the old image and LMBNew. It would also contain the new LMB image. The next step is to open the Expert tab, as shown in Figure 14-1.

FIGURE 14-1: The Expert tab is where you'll find most of Photoshop's editing controls. The tabs at the top of the Tools panel (refer to Figure 14-1) provide access to the tools you can use to perform various actions. Each one of these tabs has a handful of useful tools. Figure 14-1 shows the Expert tab. * * *

Drawn lines are called strokes. You can create and edit a stroke by first using the Pencil tool. You can find more information on the Pen tool in Chapter 11. To use the Pencil tool to create a stroke, select it from the Tools panel, and then click and hold down the left mouse button. The tool should change to the Pencil tool. With the Pencil tool active, choose the Brush tool from the Tools panel, and then click the object you want to stroke. The Pen tool changes to a brush that you can use to apply paint, in this case a color brush. In this example, the color

This invention relates to a method and apparatus for the manufacture of a coaxial electrical connector and, more particularly, to such a connector that has a center conductor capable of making a two-dimensional contact with a corresponding center conductor of a mating connector to provide a two-dimensional interlock between the two connectors, thereby minimizing relative motion between the two connectors in their inserted conditions. A typical prior art connector of this type is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,595,565 issued June 17, 1986 to the assignee of the present invention. The prior art connector is made up of a center conductor and an insulator housing in which the conductor is held. The center conductor is embedded in the insulator and has a central portion that projects outwardly and a circumferential portion located around the center portion that extends inwardly to keep it in intimate contact with the insulator. The center portion of the conductor is held in the insulator by centrifugal forces induced by rotation of the conductor during insertion of the connector into a mating connector. Such centrifugal forces are a function of the diameter and mass of the conductor, the tension in the conductor, and the rotational speed. If the connector is manually inserted, the geometry and friction present allow the connector to be inserted in just the right way that the circumference of the conductor securely grips the outer cylindrical insulator as the connector is rotated. It has been recognized that the prior art connector may be improved upon by providing a two-dimensional interlock between the center conductor and the insulator such that, when the center conductor is inserted into the insulator, the center conductor is forced to make two-dimensional contact with the insulator both radially inwardly and circumferentially, thereby providing a more secure connector and preventing rotation of the connector during insertion of the connector into a mating connector. An example of such an improved connector is the connector shown in U.S. patent application Ser. No. 07/591,437 filed on Sep. 1, 1990 by the same inventors as the present invention and assigned to the present assignee. This connector has a center conductor made of a conductive material that is a harder and more wear resistant material than the conductors normally used in the prior art. A section of the end of this improved connector is made from a conductive material different than that of the center conductor. During insertion of the connector into a mating connector, the section of this improved connector that is made of a different conductive material is
