Two years later, the number of installations was up to 400,000. Last year, it reached 1.5 million. In some countries, like Spain, it's become the primary supplier of power. While it's easy to appreciate the appeal of the sun-powered life, this technology is relatively new. And, not all power is created equal, at least not yet. There are no long-lived fossil fuel resources like coal or natural gas. So, renewable-power advocates are constantly looking for ways to get their power "on tap" through advanced storage technologies. The house in St. Cloud, whose owner is

Find the prime numbers between 1 and 1,000,000,000 using Sieve of Eratosthenes. Written by the GUI Programming Class of "How to create amazing apps" taught by Keith Murphy. Features: - Works with desktop, tablet or mobile devices - Simple interface 1 button start/stop or resume - Detects when sieving is not working correctly, report and show problem to user - Notes:

- The application could take few minutes to calculate one million numbers, you can skip this time by pressing the button 'Resume'
- Different notification sounds for starting/stopping and for each new number calculated
- 3 ways of saving / sharing / exporting data to/from a.txt file
- This is a 'beta version' of the app just a toy but think in terms of improvement, and let me know your opinion by sending email
- The first time can be used up to 25,000 numbers and after that it will calculate only the prime numbers as the user wants For example: In this hypothetical case: You have only the first 25,000 prime numbers in your calculation and after that you start the calculation and press 'Resume' button to continue. Then you have in your.txt file: 63,211, 221,247,257,349,391,451,463,521,523,541,547,569,709,741,751,757,809,819,859,877,937,971,991,997,971,991,997,971,991, 971,991,971,991 That is the number of prime numbers you had so far in your calculation. Now you finish your calculation and look at the.txt file: You can see that there are still some prime numbers (6,014) left to be calculated. Notice that this time you do not need to press the 'Resume' button because the application has detected that there are still some prime numbers left in your calculation.
- You can select 1, 2, 4, 8 or 12 seconds to wait between each new number calculated, or you can skip this waiting time (press the button 'Resume')
- You can select 1, 2 or 4 files to save or share the data saved and exported in.txt files.
- You can select 1, 2 or 4 files to export the data saved
