This article was created as a courtesy to the students from Cesar E. Chavez Elementary School and the teachers and staff at Chavez School and at the Houston Independent School District in south Houston. Special thanks to NASA for giving up their time to share their work and inspiration. The collaboration between NASA and Google is focused on enabling space exploration. Google's campus-wide Drive gives NASA and its staff access to millions of documents, ranging from satellite imagery to mission scripts, allowing anyone in the world to view or download them. For teachers like Ms. Robichaud, the resources in Drive also are an opportunity to spark a passion for the space program in young students. Cyrus Zamani, a student in Ms. Robichaud's class at Chavez School, could not believe his eyes when he saw his teacher teach and lecture using a 3D-printed model of the International Space Station (ISS). "Cyrus was shocked by the fact that she was giving a lecture using a 3D printed model of the ISS. He said it's kind of weird for her to do that. But she definitely makes an awesome teacher," Ms. Robichaud said. NASA recently made a $40,000 donation to the Houston Independent School District (HISD) to fund a 3D printing lab for use in public and charter schools, provided by 3D Systems. The donation will allow HISD to purchase 3D printing technology and training to support teachers and students in public and charter schools in the Houston area. Houston, Texas, is the second-largest city in the U.S., and one of the largest port cities in the world. It's also home to the first public school 3D printing lab in the country. For years, HISD has been teaching students about the space program, using such projects as the satellite dish, the lunar rover and the ISS 3D-printed model. Now, HISD is using 3D technology to teach students more about the space program, so they can learn how to innovate. Ms. Robichaud is grateful for this support. "The grant will allow me to expand my teaching and allow students to truly become involved in the community,

While the focus was mostly on the UI and Metro aspect, some really interesting new features are also integrated into the software. In particular, Microsoft also tried to offer a solution for users who like to use the traditional desktop as their main operating system, while simultaneously enjoying the full benefits of the Metro interface. The technology is called 'WinRT' and it allows applications to run simultaneously in a 'Windows 8 desktop shell' and a 'Windows Store UI'. 2. ATI Radeon HD 5670: It seems like AMD's new generation of graphic cards, the Radeon HD 5670 is already available in the shops. The new graphics card uses a rather small chip, which is known as 'Southern Islands'. However, this might not be a good idea, as AMD has recently made some serious downsizing in the past. Therefore, this might be an early beta version of a much better chipset, which will be released in the future. 3. Dell XPS 13: The XPS 13 is a new ultrabook that really deserves a lot of attention. The product is just as thin as Apple's MacBook Air and it uses an Intel Core i7 CPU. However, its weight is actually not that heavy. Therefore, its price is more than competitive, as the XPS 13 is available at only $700. Additionally, the XPS 13 can be customized very much, which means that it can easily be an everyday carry. The model is also certified by the American ACUG PC organization, which makes the product even more respectable. 4
