Esquire Magazine has published its 30 best undiscovered comics artists in 2015, an annual feature the likes of which nobody can remember reading but everybody on the internet remembers. If you would like to nominate someone who has a good chance of making the cut, the article is here. One of the articles on the list is by Sarah Glidden and features her Girl Meets World cover, featuring a "conflicted" Zoe from the Girl Meets World TV series. Said artist: I came into comics wanting to draw comics and not just sell T-shirts. I wanted to say something about society and make people think for themselves. I grew up with these TV shows and they drove me to create something that felt true to my own experience. Of course, I needed a comic for this. I'd see cool designs that made me think

'I should draw that!' but because I was a one-person show, I couldn't think 'I should actually design a comic with this.' So I commissioned someone else to draw the Girl Meets World comic. I gave them a loose description but was really looking for something that was specific to the show. I knew it had to have a dystopian future and I had in my head the specific versions of the character's outfits that I wanted. I think for that particular issue it really worked well and I feel like it really spoke to the show and I can't wait to see how this idea inspires new stories. But that's not all that I'm doing, which is where I come from: I'm working on a new comic that takes place in the 1960s and we have a small cast of characters. We're also working on our first graphic novel that will feature me as a scifi detective. About The Author Death f30f4ceada
