The attack, on Newyears Eve, left her scared for the future and so traumatised she can barely leave the home she shares with her husband. In a report for the BBC Asian Network's Good Morning Britain she said she noticed a man acting suspiciously when she went out to buy groceries in Hurst Park in Haringey. When she returned home she claims the man opened the door and demanded her phone, which he took and then pushed her into the hallway. He then started groping her and groping under her clothes, saying "I need to feel you" as he carried out the attacks, the woman claimed. When he was done he left the house. She knew she needed to get help but was too scared to call the police. The next day she said she found herself crying after he had shouted at her at the bus stop. "I just decided I would not go to the police because he is from our area. If I go to the police they are going to make it worse for me," the victim said. After getting home from 0cc13bf012
