Search anytime or by key words for the internet's largest network of IT knowledge for your question. Experts Exchange has IT Knowledge Sharing and the Speed Test Software Network. The Speed Test Software Network is hosted and run by experts. As good of a program as boostxp is, it often gets you into trouble. Basically, I opened up my preview of the program and saw that the program took about 30 seconds to display the average download speeds in the Speed test software network. After that, I went to the next page and typed in "download speed." The program returned an average of almost 1700 Mbps download speed instead of 6600 Mbps. The program wouldn't let me change the value at all. I finally had to disable the preview completely before I could get rid of it. Once I was in the actual program, I still saw the 1790 Mbps speed and it took me about another 30 seconds to come to the page where I could change the number, and this time it actually changed to 6600 Mbps. I'm not sure if this is just a glitch or what, but I'm still angry over it. I'm a little skeptical about the review of this program because if you read it through to the very end, it says that this program is not free. I checked and I can't find anything that would make me believe this review and I was hoping that I would be able to download the software for free. I've been waiting all afternoon for it to download and the page says that it will start in just a few seconds. It's been over an hour and nothing is happening.
