The present invention relates to a method and a device for measuring the composition, at least of water vapor, of a fluid in a circulating air flow. It is a known fact that water vapor composition, i.e., the mole fraction of the water molecules in the fluid, is controlled by temperature of the fluid and by the water vapor pressure of the fluid. In order to influence the water vapor composition of a fluid flowing in a circuit, it is known to obtain a measure of the water vapor composition in the fluid and to control the temperature or the water vapor pressure of the fluid based on the measured value. In the field of device for measuring the water vapor composition, a major attention is paid to the measurement of the water vapor composition of the air in an air flow in a flow duct since this measure is used to control the temperature and the water vapor pressure of the air. For this purpose, a sensor for measuring the composition of water vapor in the air is disclosed in WO 95/17639. The sensor is positioned in the air flow at the location where the air is heated. The heat is conveyed to the sensor by a heat exchanger in which the air is heated by convective heat transfer. The sensor measures
