
What's new in Deathlike: Awakening:

Allied forces continued to blockade the ports of Odessa, Sevastopol, Kerch, and Novorossiysk. The U-boat fleet was split, with the East Fleet remaining in the Balkans, while the West Fleet concentrated in the Mediterranean Sea. The Russian campaign had degenerated into a farce. The Axis forces, meanwhile, amassed their forces for a decisive counterstrike. The initial thrust would be sent from Rumania while the thrust from the Balkans would be sent from Greece and Crete. The plan was simple, and called for the encirclement of the Allied forces in the Crimea and the encirclement of the Allied fleet in the Aegean Sea. Planes began to bombard Allied airfields on Crete and the Dodecanese. At her closest, the Hermann Goring was about 500 miles from Gibraltar. Several weeks earlier, the Germans had done virtually nothing else. This time, however, they went on the offensive. The left wing of the German panzers was shattered by the Soviet S troops on the Ukraine positions. They were immediately attacked by the kampfguppen Parpat and Vuich. Leonard's tanks were captured, and Admiral Georg Von Friedeburg was trapped by the Bolsheviks. A speeding truck in that moment began to overtake the tank column. The tank crew member, commencing panic, dismounted the tank and nearly leaped into a ditch. Although the Germans managed to assemble a superiority on that battlefield by the time Guderian's Panzer Corps reached the Dnieper crossings, it was too late. A dense overcast cloaked the night skies and wet visibility made operations almost impossible. Expecting a Soviet tank advance from Vinnytsia towards the German position, the Germans repulsed it by artillery fire. Operation Barbarossa had begun on June 22. Facing great initial logistical problems, it had progressed admirably. This is not to say the blitz was going to be a minor success, but whatever the specific faults in the early battle planning, the ultimate over-reach of the Wehrmacht was to blame. Hitler had demanded 7,500,000 enemy troops in the invasion area, while only 5,250,000 had been dropped across the entire Soviet Union. The Soviet High Command had carefully husbanded their army, hoping that the defensive disasters at Leningrad and Moscow would force the Fuehrer's hand, and a major offensive would

In 2003, when the U.S. government granted the first $465 million to develop Clean Coal Technology (CCT), the idea behind the technology was to capture and concentrate the energy of coal in the raw fuel itself before it ever hits the burner of the power plant. This eliminated the combustion of coal and therefore the production of carbon dioxide, the cause of global warming. Prior to commercial production, CCT has been the subject of academic study for over twenty years. Now thirty years later, the first CCT facility, located in Jackson, Tennessee, has gone operational. The CCT demonstration system will capture heat and pressurize the coal to remove virtually all of the CO2 and capture it in the form of liquid CO2. It's the first time that CO2 capture has ever been used in a coal plant. It's not as cheap and clean as simply using natural gas, but CCT proponents say it is an alternative worth studying. It also involves a lot of new technology
