Play and enjoy!The studio responsible for 1998 film Little Nicky wants to make more according to its star, Jonny Depp, who tells The Hollywood Reporter that the project has moved forward despite The Weinstein Co. pulling the plug last year. Depp, who will co-star with Rosemarie DeWitt and Alison Lohman in the upcoming film, says that the project is still moving forward. But there is no word yet on when a new version of the film will be released. "The Weinstein Co. is making it," says Depp. "They're making it." DeWitt originally was attached to star in the film, which was to be directed by Noah Baumbach. But just last September, the French producer, distributor and financier Pascale de Beauvais filed a lawsuit against the Weinsteins, alleging that the studio breached a contract by not paying her to star in the film. Depp added, "Pascale was being a professional and following the rules and doing the things that the contract said she was supposed to do," while also playing the part of a drug dealer. DeWitt said in a statement at the time that she was "really disappointed" by the lawsuit, while the Weinsteins' spokesman called the case "frivolous." DeWitt also said in the statement that she is not working with the Weinstein Company on the film at this time. But she did say that the feature film was in development. The Weinsteins' Weinstein Company made the announcement in November 2012 that it was axing two films, Mirrors and An Officer And A Spy. They recently announced that they're producing a film called Weinstein Presents: Mrs. Doubtfire 2 starring Depp. Reps for the Weinsteins did not immediately respond to EW's request for comment. The THR story went on to say that a new version of Little Nicky is to be directed by Craig Brewer and to be shot for under $30 million in just four days. The Weinstein Company's hold on the film could be problematic if they are legally due any of the unpaid money, but the studio may just want to be done
