Now you can bring that same hope and inspiration to elementary and secondary schools by sponsoring a field trip to Washington, D.C. This could be your chance to inspire, educate, and motivate a new generation to do great things. You can help Washington, D.C., by sponsoring an educational field trip at a school, and in return, you will receive a special recognition on the school's webpage, a high quality photograph of the group, and a low resolution digital copy of that photograph. Exact dates and times will be determined at the time of your selection. It's that simple. Just visit the website and select which visit you are interested in, and choose a date you can attend. Electrical equipment, such as power line communications (PLC) equipment, may comprise one or more electrical equipment enclosures. Some electrical equipment enclosures are configured to be mounted in a stud or similar mounting apparatus of a building structure, such as a wall or an overhead structure, and in order to be mounted, may include mounting hardware configured to mate with the mounting apparatus. Unfortunately, when an electrical equipment enclosure is mounted in a building structure, vibration may be transmitted through the mounting hardware and through the electrical equipment enclosure to the mounting hardware. Such vibration may cause unwanted interaction with the electrical equipment enclosed in the electrical equipment enclosure, such as movement of the electrical equipment or the enclosure itself and/or may cause damage to the electrical equipment. Therefore, there exists a need to limit or prevent undesirable vibration in electrical equipment enclosures. The present invention relates to a mining machine provided with a take-up reel and, more particularly, to a winding device for a take-up reel used in a mining machine, which enables take-up of a winding core shaft of the take-up reel by a spare core shaft, and is capable of preventing the winding core shaft of the take-up reel from being unwound so that a take-up reel can be quickly and efficiently mounted into a mining machine. As conventional mining machines, there gotcha journalism,” she said. “I’m also really excited to be working with an area, with a district, with a state and a nation that’s starting to see some really exciting reform on issues like criminal justice reform and ending cash bail, as well as reducing incarceration and incarceration rates and what that means for families, for children, for the current generation and the future generation.” According to a recent survey by the American Correctional Association, 56 percent of its members believe that justice reform is likely to be a front and center issue in the 2020 election. The growing number of criminal-justice reform advocates have rallied around many of the same issues that Sanders highlighted: ending mandatory minimum sentences and providing equal treatment to nonviolent criminals; and allowing crime victims to restructure their own sentences, in which the cost of living is added to the amount of time a person is incarcerated. But the number of states that have implemented these reforms is still quite small. “There are

A subspecies of the wild native tiger has been driven to extinction, likely due to uncontrolled hunting by Chinese poachers, scientists say. The Asiatic tiger was historically a common sight throughout Asia. Today there are fewer than 3,200 tigers left across the continent. In the past decade, their population has plummeted by 70 percent, said a study published on Monday in the journal Molecular Ecology. Some experts blame all this decline on illegal wildlife trafficking, citing as an example a huge haul of wild tiger skins being discovered at an Indonesian port. Strikingly, although the Asian tiger declined in numbers, the subspecies actually had a slight increase in the last decade, said the study. "What we found was that tiger populations in China actually increased, probably because of the trade in illegal wildlife," said Kyaw Hla Oung, an expert in molecular ecology at the University of Oxford and one of the lead authors of the study. The results are "fairly astounding," said David Shepherd, chairman of the wildlife trade department at the World Wildlife Fund. "The sheer rate at which tigers are being taken from the wild is of great concern." The co-author of the study, Lisa Haft, who formerly worked for the World Wildlife Fund, said she was surprised and disappointed. "The Chinese [poaching] trade should have been stopped much earlier," she said. The scientists examined genetic data from tiger populations across 16 countries in Southeast Asia and compared them to data from other parts of the world. They found that tigers in China experienced a significant population decline, but did not find a similar drop in species other than tigers. China has a population of 2,319 big cat species, including lions, leopards and Père David's deer — an animal that lives only in China. One of the largest populations of Asiatic tigers in the world is in the grasslands of northeast China, according to the study. However, the tiger population in those areas declined by half over the past 15 years, which the scientists consider a disaster for the subspecies, they said. The Asian tiger has not been targeted by poachers for long, but their persistence has allowed the subspecies to survive better than many of their relatives that have been hunted for decades.
