What's new in MageCosmos:

“How.” “The.” “How?!” A black cat walks across a white dog’s hind-quarters. A dog believes its nose is in the trash. A poem is eaten by a lizard in a room covered in red smoke, its juices dripping on a gramophone. Welcome to another in the continuing series, Exercising the Writing Brain, which aims to improve you as a writer, whether you’re just starting out or a seasoned veteran. The point is, we all write. But we also are constantly thinking about how best to get from point A to point B. The Writing Brain series is a particular way of thinking about that. In the series, we’ll go through variations on a theme. We’ll try new things. We’ll expose our brains, or at least plug their ears. We will never lie, I promise. There may even be occasional cats (and dogs) and themes (but you can forget the cats and dogs.) You could also call this column Poemopolis, Poemophobia, or Paws-and-Claws Poetry or something like that. It’s all about - well, the theme is about “how.” This month, we begin a series of articles dealing with “how.” “How” is a particular set of questions to which we need to be alert all the time. This will work in a sequential manner, I’m not going to turn and look to see where we are. Spencer Young felt a “how” poem ought to say hello to an audience-and to do so “using the language of another culture.” While it’s not a wide-spread credo, I think there’s a connection between writing poetry and thinking outside the box, a big part of those being the themes of this series. I’ll do my best not to cause you any harm in this exercise, but there’s danger in thinking you know how something should be - be careful. My approach to best-selling author Philippa Gregory for Paws-and-Claws Poetry this time was very different. I knew I was dealing with one of the classics of the genre, and a horror author. So I figured Philippa might have a story or element that would work. You don’t

For those of you who grew up in the era when the Super Nintendo GameBoy or N64 was the biggest thing on the market, I've created a game that will be for you. This adventure game has both of the controls available and all of the story is played out before you in a "heartful" style. If you've ever felt that the experience of the first game didn't live up to your expectations, this is the title for you. It certainly has lots of hidden treasures for those who take their time to explore them. I don't know about you, but I feel that some of the games were so rushed and lack the basic fun element. Add to that, the soundtrack is full of classic game music from throughout history, so you'll definitely get a good nostalgic feeling when you play this game. This 3D platformer has been created with a lot of care and attention. It's not just a game, but a full-fledged experience, so enjoy this quality title!

Transcriptional regulators in skin wound repair. Wound repair is a complex process encompassing a well-orchestrated sequence of cellular events, which in the case of skin is followed by the formation of a scar. This process is tightly controlled by a combination of regulatory signals, which influence cells at specific stages of the healing process, for example, from the proliferation phase to the final differentiation. In addition to the local regulation, cutaneous wound repair is also controlled by various systemic signals
