Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a recording apparatus, a recording method, and a computer-readable recording medium. 2. Description of the Related Art Recording apparatuses that record an image on a recording medium or reproduce an image recorded on a recording medium, for example, a copying machine, a printer, a facsimile machine, and a multifunction machine having combined functions of them, which is provided with an automatic document feeder (ADF), have been known. An image recorded on a recording medium by a recording apparatus is, in many cases, recorded in a state of being continuously superimposed on another image. Therefore, if recording is performed with inadequate density, an intended image is not appropriately reproduced. In view of this, in the field of a color printer, an image is recorded in such a manner that an image to be recorded in advance in a wide area is continuously recorded in multiple passes, and is superimposed with a background image to be recorded in multiple passes in a joint area with the image. The image recorded in a state of being continuously superimposed is, in many cases, recorded in a state of being superimposed on a recording medium in multiple passes, and is transferred onto a recording medium in a state of being multi-processed. FIGS. 25 and 26 illustrate an example of an image having, for example, a background color that appears in a background region (a region Y in FIG. 25) where an image to be recorded in multiple passes is recorded in a state of being continuously superimposed on the background color. FIG. 25 illustrates a first region X1 in which an image to be
