bracket. The government's rationale was that a lower tax rate would motivate more Canadians to create wealth through enterprise and creativity, thereby generating economic growth, higher incomes, and thereby providing greater tax revenue. The tax cuts were delivered in successive waves. The first wave was the cut in the upper-bracket effective federal income tax rate. For that first year, the rate dropped from a top rate of 47 per cent to a top rate of 41 per cent, and the small business and capital gains tax rate went down by half a per cent. Story continues below advertisement The next year, the rate was cut to 40 per cent, and the small business and capital gains rate of 50 per cent was eliminated. For the third year, the rate was cut to 38 per cent, and the small business and capital gains rate was dropped to zero. For the fourth and final year, the rate was raised back to the previous top marginal tax
