This invention relates to the field of paper screening machines, and in particular to a new and improved classifier for use in a paper screening machine which provides a plurality of classifying stages one after the other and which uses a unique drive arrangement for each of the classifying stages. It is known from German patent application No. 2,733,260 to provide at least one classifying stage in the course of the paper screening machine and to be able to adjust the machine parameters for processing different types of paper, for example, for adapting the machine parameters for a jumbo format, for a letter format or for a legal format, or for adapting the machine parameters to the experience curve of an operator. The parameters can be adjusted by changing the drive speed and in particular adjusting the through-flow speed and the feed-in speed. For these adjustments to be made, the drive transmission from the drive shaft to the pairs of shoes or support rollers, for example, must be disengaged and then reengaged. Since the drive transmission is disengaged, this can cause problems such as jamming or slipping of the paper web through the machine and problems for the operator. In addition, such adjustment of the machine parameters requires a large number of times of adjustment of the drive transmission which greatly limits the use of the new adjustment arrangement.
