When should you use a version of Photoshop? We'll talk about the differences between Photoshop CS6, Photoshop Elements, Photoshop Lightroom, and Photoshop CC as well as what to look for when making a decision between the two. And we'll guide you through the basics of a layered document, including how to work with adjustment layers, blend modes, and layer masks to control the way your image is edited. Understanding the

Layers The vast majority of tools in Photoshop are introduced via layers. It's a robust image editing system that lets you control multiple aspects of your image from one "layer." This way, you can make changes to them all in one go. It's similar to a word processing document with multiple pages you can turn, save, and print or send to the publisher. You can also build Photoshop documents with a page layout that uses a background layer and changes the layers you see on that page.

Multilayered documents have a variety of uses. For example, you can build a presentation for a client in a layered document. First, you'll create a front cover with the layout you want on that page. Then you'll create a layer for the table of contents (to flip through the different pages of the presentation) and save the file. You'll also use layers to make quick and easy graphic changes to a photo with the Liquid Rescale filter (Enzyme) or to adjust the brightness and contrast of a photo (as in this tutorial: Setting Brightness and Contrast). Here's how to create a layered document. How to Create a Layered Document In Photoshop, you work with layers with the Layers panel, as shown here. You can collapse any layers you don't use. Step 1:

Open a Document The first step is to open a document in Photoshop. You can use any of the file types listed in the sidebar. The purpose of the document you open in Photoshop is your guide for how the layers you create will work. For example, you'll want to create a document that uses a grouped layer as a background for a web presentation, or you'll create a document that starts out as a blank canvas. Step 2: Create a New Layer With a document open in Photoshop, it's time to

Chinese market is booming as Myanmar exports rose Myanmar's exports to China rose by 43.4 percent and Chinese investment in the Myanmar economy surged by 58 percent, surpassing the United States as Myanmar's top investor. This was revealed by the quarterly Economic Bulletin issued by the Myanmar Economic Forum (Mef). The report said China's imports from Myanmar have increased by 17.6 percent and its investments in Myanmar reached $1.24 billion in 2017. The United States was second with $1.04 billion. The investment increase was due to the Myanmar government's decision to relax investment and investment promotion policies, said the report. "Myanmar has opened its market to Chinese companies in a variety of sectors such as construction, trading, transportation, real estate, food processing, manufacturing, information technology, insurance, telecommunications and banking," said the report. Saw Ei Thu, chairman of the Mef, said Myanmar's foreign trade amounted to $1.53 billion, up by 0.9 percent. "The trade deficit in 2017 was $2.27 billion, down by 1.2 percent. The export deficit amounted to $362 million, down by 25.9 percent. "Myanmar still imports a lot of its raw materials from China, such as wood, minerals and minerals. This is because our foreign exchange is still almost all in the Chinese Yuan. We have not established trade relations with any other countries." He also pointed out that Myanmar imports most of its computers from China and that the biggest export items are second-hand clothing and timber. Saw Ei Thu praised the role of technology in boosting Myanmar's economy. "The country was a self-sufficient agricultural producer but later abandoned its agricultural industry and did not have enough food because of poverty. However, a digital economy has now started to make more food," he said. Myanmar is still in the initial stage of the digital economy, with only 0.3 percent of its GDP being generated by e-commerce, according to the report. It said the country has a vast array of rich information and resources but there are only six e-commerce companies in the country. It noted the presence of only about 3,000 websites in Myanmar. Saw Ei Thu said it is not certain whether Myanmar will be
