What's New In?

Abortion rights activists protested outside the Supreme Court on Wednesday to demonstrate their opposition to the upcoming Roe v. Wade anniversary. The activists rallied outside the Supreme Court and waved signs that read "Abortion rights are human rights" and "You don't get to decide what my body does." "I'm here to express to the Supreme Court and the country that women's lives, women's health, and women's bodies are not political," said Bethany Christian Services National Director of the Rights of the Unborn Kimberly Michels, Washington Examiner. Supporters of the abortion rights movement including Feminists for Life, which lobbies for women to have access to abortions, the Catholic group Priests for Life, and Americans United for Life, were also outside to speak out against the Roe v. Wade anniversary. The protesters also appeared to be acting on behalf of the American Congress for Life (ACL), a politically conservative pro-life organization that argues that abortions must be outlawed for the sake of the country. "Every year we gather here to make our voices heard in the Supreme Court," said Camilla Taylor, ACL's lead lobbyist, according to CNPV. "Abortion is legal, and has been illegal for 35 years in our country, and has remained a prominent issue in the political arena, and we continue to make our voices heard here." Breitbart News Senior Legal Editor Ken Klukowski said the ACL is right about the importance of Roe v. Wade, and so are the activists protesting outside the Supreme Court. "When you look at the back half of the history of our Supreme Court and Roe v. Wade, you see a steady progression in the court, the center of gravity of our constitutional system, and that center of gravity is increasingly moving away from the principle of equal protection and due process under the law, and progressively creating a right of substantive due process that essentially says all rights come from the state and that the state is always free to legislate as it wishes," Klukowski told Breitbart News. "So the state has the absolute right to kill the unborn, and they have never lacked for opportunity to do so." "Americans United for Life, Life Legal Defense Foundation, and the American College of Pro-Life Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and all the rest of us, we want
