Influence of reducing sugar compounds on the metabolism and growth of Tetrahymena sp. Addition of galactose, glucose, lactose, maltose, sucrose, fructose or trehalose to a Tetrahymena sp. culture resulted in an inhibition of growth. The inhibitory effect was greatest with the disaccharides and less pronounced with monosaccharides. The inhibition was due to sugar consumption. Addition of L-arabinose, L-rhamnose, mannose, myo-inositol, fucose, D-mannose, N-acetyl-D-galactosamine, glucosamine, xylose, N-acetyl-D-glucosamine or L-serine, but not of D-glucuronic acid, acetyl-L-cysteine or cystine, increased growth. Addition of D-gluconate did not significantly affect growth. Addition of 10(-1) mol/l L-rhamnose or lactose at the start of the culture inhibited growth more than the addition of the same concentration of the other monosaccharides. The inhibitory effect was greatest with L-rhamnose. Inhibitory effects of monosaccharides disappeared after they had been consumed. These results suggest that disaccharides may cause a deficiency of growth factors by competition for the transport or the metabolism of a factor or inhibition of certain enzyme reactions in the cell and that the effects may depend on the specific disaccharide.10.05.2011 | 31:00 Frazier's goal production up 22% vs '09-'10 Vancouver Canucks fans, like the rest of us, are used to seeing veteran winger Alex Burrows produce more fantasy points per game than his younger counterpart. Burrows' wingership status, however, hasn't stopped him from making significant improvements to his scoring totals in recent years. Burrows put together a career high 22 goals and 51 points to begin his latest campaign and is on pace to eclipse his career best for points this season. A 25.5% shooting percentage is also one of the best on the team. Burrows' point totals are up 22.2% from 2009-10. He is currently producing at a rate of 2.3 fantasy points per game. While he didn

What's New in the Photoshop CC 2014?

Q: JS to make part of a textarea editable only I have a textarea where I want the first 100 characters to be not editable and from the second 100 characters to be editable. How can this be done in Javascript/Jquery? I know this can be done through HTML (as is shown here) but I want to know if it can be done in JS or JQuery. A: Use a type="text" and a maxlength attribute to set the maximal length (and thus the maximal range that's not clickable). For example: var editor = document.getElementById("editor"); editor.setAttribute("maxlength","2000"); Q: Reuse the same JavaScript function in a collection of objects I am trying to program a command line editor where each command is represented by a JavaScript object. Commands can have subcommands, which are represented as sub-object within the command object. I wrote a function called "doCommand()" that takes a command and returns the result of some processing on the command. For example, to set the window title to a string, I have the following: function doCommand(command) { return window.title = command.getName(); } This works fine when the command is the only thing executed. For example, if I execute var command = new Command("hello",[new Subcommand("name", new StringParameter("world"))]); I can execute doCommand(command); and the window title will be "hello world". But if I try to execute doCommand(command); doCommand(command.subcommand); nothing happens. I think it has something to do with scope and the enclosing closure. I can resolve it by creating a separate function for the specific action of the subcommand, like so: function doCommand(command) { var subcommandResult = function(subcommand) { return window.title = subcommand.getName(); } return window.title = command.getName(); } But
