Currently, he's stopped in Atlanta to meet with chef Mike Mills and Food Network star John Mayer, who serves as executive producer on "Bizarre Foods." During an interview with Mayer, the singer-songwriter congratulated Zimmern on his new season of the show and spoke about how much he enjoys the show. "It's a real treat for me to watch it," Mayer said. "I love it. It's entertaining and very smart, but it's also free of judgment. It's like you're watching people cook or do their job. That's what makes it such a good show." Mayer has also provided the show with the season two theme song "Back to the Start." Additionally, Mayer has his own album, Running on Empty, coming out in late February. Check out Mayer's interview with Zimmern here.

Q: Setting Limit of Positional Function of Jquery I'm trying to move an image from left to right on the basis of the data that user has entered. The html part: The javascript part: `var s1 = $("#s1"); var s2 = $("#s2"); s1.on("click", function() { s2.val(parseInt(s2.val()+1); });` Now my problem is the use is creating a lot of records which increases the load time. I want to limit the movement of the image in the particular number of records the user has generated. Does Jquery supports any API to be implemented to work over this concept, Please suggest. Thanks.

A: You can use `setInterval()` `var s1 = $("#s1"); var s2 = $("#s2"); var intervalID = window.setInterval(function(){ s2.val(parseInt`
