The present invention relates to therapeutic methods and compositions. More particularly, the present invention relates to polypeptides, proteins and peptides, and their method of use. Chronic and acute diseases are known to cause physical pain, suffering, mental anguish and suffering. One common example of a chronic disease is arthritis, which can cause pain and discomfort, and can eventually prevent a patient from carrying out normal daily activities. Acute diseases such as, for example, accidental injury, myocardial infarction, heart failure, epilepsy, asthma and other respiratory diseases can also result in acute pain, suffering, mental anguish and suffering. Often, acute pain, suffering, mental anguish and suffering, including chronic pain, are the result of physical trauma or wounding. Many debilitating diseases exist and affect the elderly and socioeconomically disadvantaged populations. These diseases include diabetes, multiple sclerosis, and cancer. Many of these diseases cause acute and chronic pain. For example, diabetes-induced neuropathy (diabetic neuropathy) is often characterized by chronic pain. Some of these diseases are also characterized by nausea, vomiting, slow digestion and abnormal bowel function. Because of the frailty of these patients, pain management options are often limited. Medications, such as steroids, can have unwanted side effects. Surgical intervention can be risky. There is a need for treatment of pain in connection with the foregoing conditions and diseases, including those associated with surgery and with diabetes. The present invention is directed to a method of treating pain, including, for example, acute pain or chronic pain. The method involves administering a therapeutically effective amount of a peptide as described herein. The present invention is directed to compositions for treating pain. The compositions include a pharmaceutically acceptable carrier, and a peptide described herein. The present invention is directed to methods of measuring the bioavailability of a peptide. The methods include administering to a human or animal subject an amount of the peptide as described herein. The amount of peptide is provided to or received by the subject, and the bioavailability of the peptide is measured. A decrease in the level of the peptide in the subject is observed in comparison with a baseline level, indicating that the amount of the peptide is absorbed into the subject. The present invention is directed to methods of screening for a compound that enhances the bioavailability of a peptide. The methods include, for example, administering to a human or animal subject an amount of a peptide as described herein, and measuring
