move are the third and fourth pin. The first and second pin are labeled as the contacts of the jumpers. You'll need to move these pins from their original positions as indicated in the diagram to a position where the CD drive will now be able to read or write a CD correctly. I would suggest taking the drive to a reputable electronics repair shop and allowing them to do this for you. Q: This button has class 'disabled', and when its clicked needs to be disabled I am currently working on a modal form using CSS and HTML. I have a button that looks like this: Submit Clicking this button does nothing. I have a piece of jQuery that when the form is submitted I will change this button's CSS class to disabled. However, the problem I have is that this button needs to be disabled on page load. How can I do that? Do I have to add a piece of Javascript to do this? Thanks in advance! A: Use the class in css .disabled { color: grey; background: none; border: none; cursor: default; /* added */ } and on the button add the class. Then use !important on the styles to override the css .btn.disabled { /* your styles */ } Q: Xcode 6 setup issue: Gatekeeper denied when using development location from another Mac I'm running Xcode 6.3.2 on Yosemite (10.10.1) with my developer account.
