A: If you are creating a global object like you seem to be, you can't just assign the data object like that. Global variables are stored in the global object window, or in a similar top level variable. `window.data = data;` You can also create a new property in the window object called `data`: `window.data = data;` You can then access the data through that key, for example: `alert(window.data);` Q: Sending an Email from Android app with external Email Client and SMTP

Server I would like to know how can I send an email from my application when using a SMTP server and an external email client. I already found out that I can use the Gmail Java API to send an email but I would like to know if there is another way to get the job done without the need of using Java. A: Use the SendEmail class, it will give you the ability to send email from almost any mail server and client (uses standard internet mail protocols: SMTP, IMAP, POP, etc.) This one is very simple, if you want the you can cells. More specifically, the invention relates to the cycling characteristics of an aprotic metal halide cell containing a sodium ion containing intercalation electrode. 2. State of the Prior Art

The use of nonaqueous sodium metal as a negative electrode material for secondary or rechargeable metal halide cells is well known. Examples are shown in U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,024,130 to Mol et al, 3,383,274 to Srinivasan, 3,463,770 to Durst, 3,551,229 to Nakashima, 3,637,517 to Tsai and 3,806,389 to Wares. The cycling characteristics of these aprotic type cells have been shown to be excellent, but not practical. Exemplary cycling characteristics are shown in the aforementioned U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,637,517 and 3,806,389. It is known that cycling characteristics of cells using the intercalation of sodium into an oxide cathode electrode can be substantially improved by the addition of a lithium compound in the cathode which results in a lithium oxyhalide intercalation compound as shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,084,145 to Holden and Tanner.
