Jurassic mahjong, or simply mahjong, is a mahjong variant specifically popular in Japan. It was developed by Kenzo Kuriyama, a mahjong fan in the 1980s. Originating from Chinese mahjong tiles, the game features a distinctly Japanese flavor. The main differences are the more simplistic rules and tiles. For instance, the Japanese game only has 15 tiles, while the Chinese game has 99, each of a different shape. The Japanese game uses a single-opening play, whereas the Chinese game uses a double-opening play. History Similar to the pachi-jikken variety, mahjong was first imported into Japan in the late 19th century, officially by the Meiji government as part of culture assimilation. It was then played by the Japanese. After Japan's win over China in the Sino-Japanese War in 1895, the game proliferated throughout the country and throughout Japan's colonies. In 1921, the Japanese army played the expansion pack official games on a daily basis in Mongolia. This game gained a lot of popularity and was improved upon. Due to the prohibition of mahjong and pachinko machines in the United States in the 1930s, nationwide mahjong clubs were started. Western affiliates of these clubs made changes to make the game more suitable for the environment. In the 1950s, some mahjong players in Japan sought to standardize the rules. These efforts prompted Kenzo Kuriyama to create the first official rule set. Kenzo debuted the first official set during the 1961 Nihon Mahjong Championships, which was a tournament held in Kyoto. The 1913 game-set for the traditional Mahjong is considered the first official game. It laid the foundation for the rules that form the basis for the modern Japanese mahjong variant. On May 9, 1969, Chiharu Kinoshita found a mahjong new play and divided it into the 1995 Game-Set #1. In 2010, the Devastator's Shimo Company Ltd. released the first English language mahjong rule book, written by Mai

Zielinski. Other languages were published later. Recently, a standard mahjong variant was adopted by the Japan Mahjong Association. Rules Unlike the traditional Chinese Mahjong, where the goal is to cooperate with your opponents, the goal in this mahjong variant is to count your own points. Most of the rules presented in standard Mahjong are present in Jurassic to some degree, but there are differences, especially for the opening.

Defenders Glory is the first truly addictive Tower Defense RPG, in which a player can unlock over ten game modes, with multiple classes and Class Races to try out, as they progress through the game. Defenders Glory is built with a minimum of six classes, six unique and completely different gameplay experiences: Class A: Fast Paced, Tactical Shooter A variety of straight-line, tactical shooters: most of them being semiauto only, with a very fine attention for precision shooting, while offering a maximum level of versatility with unlockable upgrades, going from their use of semiauto to full auto, dual wield, and much more. Each class is a completely different playstyle and, even though they are all semiauto guns, they all come from different sources: The Bronze, Silver, Gold and Platinum of Defender's Glory are all exclusive to the Tactical Shooter class. Class B: Area Defensive Defensive guns that have very little mobility or versatility, being weak in range, but strong in direct hits on the enemy. Lately, the walls have been overrun by Demonic Infections, and the only way to protect the kingdoms is to get more of them in their way, which is what the Area Defensive class is, with the possibility of unlocking the Quantum Bow: An Infected Level 7 Sniper with an area-wide long-range hit. Class C: Ranged Fighter A group of ranged fighters, which specialize in long-range attacks, and very fine attention to details. The Artillery and the Rapid Fire can be aimed, and all the three of them come from unique sources. In the Artillery class, players can unlock the Mastodon Cannon, a powerful gun with a complete arsenal of support weapons and abilities: a variety of turrets, missiles, and launchers, with the option to unlock even more. The Rapid Fire class is for the likes of jetpacks and zip lines, with the most powerful accessories targeting multiple enemies simultaneously, while the Shotgun is a classic autocannon of a double-barreled design, but with a unique damage type, very fine accuracy, and a small number of shots. Class D: Heavy Zone Defenses Heavy zone defense are the main cornerstone of the gameplay. They are highly mobile, with a large amount of health and hefty damage. Both the Blasters and the Big Guns can be aimed, and are the fastest guns in the game, with the Heavy Zone Defense of the Platinum Class being the only exception, being the slowest gun. Both classes are very versatile
