(Why wouldn't anyone have this idea before? To change the style of picture display, the idea has been around for years. Todays TV sets and computer screens have a resolution of 525×400px or higher. So why doesn't the picture fit?) Today, Bloomberg TV is now being dubbed "The Evening Edition of Bloomberg." And as a tribute to the former boss, the network recently added a disclaimer: "This program is a paid political advertisement." But not everyone got it. "Was it necessary to say 'paid political advertisement'?" a viewer asked in the comments. Right. Because the sole purpose of Bloomberg TV is to be a journalistic source — not, as Bloomberg News has always tried to portray itself, a sponsor of advocacy, lobbying or campaign propaganda. Unfortunately, a few of the people selling the message to Bloomberg TV — its advertising clients — saw it differently. The dramatic part of my morning e-mail turned out to be a hoax
