Q: Is it possible to use the wide copy constructor with std::thread? I have code that is basically like this: `class Shared { mutable std::mutex m; public: Shared() = default; ... void send(); };` I need the object Shared to be copyable, which means it needs to be copy constructable (C++11) and the constructor of the copy should be elided by the compiler when possible. This means I'd like to have the following signature for the send() method: `void send(Shared const& other);` The way I'm currently calling this method looks like: `boost::enable_if::type send(const Shared *shared) { shared->send(); }` However, this is pretty slow (taking the equivalent of 30 - 100 milliseconds when
