At the end of the process, they enrolled their baby in the intensive in-home intervention program, Texas Cures Autism, where she started to show signs of what the state calls "typical autism." Now almost 3, the girl, who the Fosters adopted, had her first "Texas Time," a 10-day stay at a large summer camp in Huntsville over Labor Day weekend. "We knew that she was different since she was a baby," said Lynn, 45, a former company director at a Texas telecommunications company. "But we didn't really understand the autism until we went through the treatments." On Wednesday, Lynn testified before the Texas Senate Committee on Economic Development in support of a bill that would provide the $45 million needed for a state-funded program that serves up to 1,100 children with autism each year and would save taxpayers an estimated $260 million to $270 million annually when it comes time to pay for the program in the coming decade. The bill, SB 2, was approved by the Senate Committee on Economic Development on Sept. 19, but has not been scheduled for a vote in the Senate or the House. SB 2, introduced last month by Texas Democratic State Sen. Wendy Davis, would expand the number of preschool slots at early childhood development centers to the maximum allowed by Texas law. A companion bill, also introduced last month by Davis, is before the House Education Committee. The plan to expand preschool slots at a cost of $1.4 million a year was first proposed in May 2012 as a part of the state's autism spectrum disorder prevention plan that began the rollout of the Texas Cures Autism program. Craniofacial microsomia is a congenital anomaly characterized by the absence of the mandible and maxillary structures (zygoma, palate, face, and the muscles of the facial expression). During the past decade the embryology of this anomaly has been extensively studied and several pathogenetic mechanisms have been postulated. These involve defects in the migration or differentiation of mesodermal tissues in the region of the branchial arches, and prenatal defects of the structures that join the mandible to the hyoid apparatus and the skull base. Analysis of recent literature and our experience show that this disease is multifactorial and is probably the result of the interaction of both genetic factors and environmental factors.Q: Programmatically importing a Zend Framework module Zend Framework 2 is new for me and I'm trying to figure out if it makes sense to use it in my project.
