This invention relates to a deck plate, particularly to a metal deck plate for a vehicle. The deck plate of an automotive vehicle comprises a body panel and a sheet metal deck formed integrally on the body panel. It is known to provide a deck plate with a hollow outer surface formed by curving a portion of the body panel to form a concave surface and welding the deck to this concave portion of the body panel. In forming the deck it has been proposed to roll the body panel and strip the sheet metal deck from the rolled body panel and then to bend and shape the deck by an ironworker's press to provide a desired curvature. For example, the deck can be formed by roll bending the body panel and forming the curved concave sheet metal surface over the curved concave portion of the body panel. It has also been proposed to bend the sheet metal deck over a curvilinear arcuate mold when forming the sheet metal deck. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,665,832 and 5,820,913 disclose such methods.

Known methods for roll bending the body panel to form the curved concave surface and welding the sheet metal deck to the body panel are not without disadvantages. Roll bending of the body panel may produce a fatigue failure at the welded joint resulting in a failure of the welded joint and/or separation of the welded joint. In addition, forming the curved concave surface of the body panel by roll bending to facilitate welding of the deck to the body panel involves forming a separate curved concave portion of the body panel and welding the deck to the separate curved concave portion of the body panel. The present invention is directed to a novel deck plate assembly, particularly for an automotive vehicle. More particularly, in accordance with the present invention, a deck plate assembly includes a sheet metal deck and a body panel. The body panel is formed with a curvilinear concave surface adapted to receive the deck. The body panel and the sheet metal deck are welded together at a welding area. The welding area has a relatively high concentration of welds between the body panel and the sheet metal deck. In accordance with the present invention, a method of forming the deck plate assembly includes roll bending the body panel to form a curvilinear concave surface and then welding the deck to the body panel. The present invention is also directed to a novel method of forming the body panel of a vehicle. The method includes roll forming the
