Renal inactivation of acetaminophen in patients with chronic renal failure. Single-dose kinetics and steady-state pharmacokinetics of acetaminophen were investigated in patients with chronic renal failure (CRF) and in age-matched controls. Two test series were performed: in the first series, acetaminophen was administered as an intravenous (iv) infusion to patients and controls; in the second series, a single oral dose of acetaminophen was administered to patients and controls. Plasma clearance (Cl) and volume of distribution (Vd) were decreased by 50% (p less than 0.001) and 15% (p less than 0.005) in the patients with CRF (Cl = 82 +/- 16 mL/min/kg, Vd = 143 +/- 35 L/kg) when compared to the controls (Cl = 153 +/- 40 mL/min/kg, Vd = 229 +/- 53 L/kg), respectively. This decrease in Cl was associated with a four-fold increase in the half-life (t1/2) of acetaminophen in the CRF patients. Urinary excretion rates of the acetaminophen metabolites (p-aminophenol and p-acetaminophen sulfate) were decreased by 66% (p
