Current techniques for sequencing DNA include DNA sequencing by hybridization, chemical degradation sequencing and single-base sequencing. The hybridization sequencing method, for example, is based on the principle that DNA fragments from different lengths migrate at different rates when an electrophoretic medium having the same resolution as the native gel is used. Short fragments migrate at a slower rate than long fragments and the fragments of different lengths can be resolved by the length of their respective distances along the gel. A method for sequencing DNA based on the use of a long chain-length DNA binding ligand and electrical field gradient to separate DNA fragments is described in PCT Patent Publication WO 88/04300. In this technique, the maximum resolving power of about 8.5 kbp is achieved by positioning a pair of electrodes in a capillary with the
