Taking the player through the pre-match tunnel, EA Sports is using the near-future as a means to explore the potential of the next generation of video games, showcasing an emotionally-charged first-person match. EA Sports' senior producer Matt Stancombe and head of AI, Stevi Williams, both make an appearance at the Fifa 22 Crack Steam World Premiere. Revealed at EA Play 2016, this is a landmark year for video games. Electronic Arts Play at the LAX Hilton featured a stellar lineup of launch titles, not the least of which was a playable version of Madden NFL '17. Also unveiled was something very big, something that promises to have a massive impact on the future of gaming and at the same time demonstrates just how far we've come in this industry. Revealed at EA Play 2016, this is a landmark year for video games. Electronic Arts Play at the LAX Hilton featured a stellar lineup of launch titles, not the least of which was a playable version of Madden NFL '17. Also unveiled was something very big, something that promises to have a massive impact on the future of gaming and at the same time demonstrates just how far we've come in this industry. The announcement itself was made at a later date, when EA premiered the launch trailer for FIFA 22, featuring real-life stars, and live footage of a football match. While we're used to seeing live gameplay of the NFL and NBA games, that has been unheard of so far in the FIFA franchise. This made for an intriguing addition to the game's reveal. The reality show-style presentation is augmented by a song from rock group Paramore, titled "The Only Exception." At the LAX Hilton EA Sports had three primary goals for the event. One, they wanted to introduce the public to some of their new players, like Mo Salah, Xavi, and David Luiz. Two, they wanted to demonstrate just how far they've come from last year's trailer, and make that clear. And three, they wanted to demonstrate that you can have memorable moments in a football game. The main event was a FIFA 22 trailer showing a match being played in the future. The setting is a near-future. The cutscenes show players getting suited up for the game and then jumping into the heat of the action in the field. There are some thoughts from the coaches, players and the physios on the sidelines

Features Key:

- FIFA 22 introduces "HyperMotion Technology" based on the motion capture data collected from players of a real-life, high-intensity football match. This new motion capture-driven engine dynamic can be found in all single player and multiplayer modes, including more than every FIFA mode ever seen in a FIFA game, like Ultimate Team, Training, and Road to Rio.
- One of the most anticipated versions of the game, FIFA 22 comes with new game modes, broadcast feature, coach system and rewards, club specific kits and more.
