Corneal endothelium cell activity and endothelial cell damage with endotamponade of the eyeball in experimental models. With increasing interest in the use of air-filled intraocular lens implants in patients with persistent endothelial cell damage, an experimental model was established to study the effect of prolonged air endotamponade on corneal endothelial cell morphology and function. In an attempt to create a degree of clinically relevant air endotamponade, we used a rat model to study the effect of endotamponade, similar to that seen in pseudoexfoliation syndrome, with up to 25% air in the anterior chamber of the eye on corneal endothelial cell morphology and function. No differences were found in the morphology and overall appearance of the endothelial surface or in the ultrastructure of the endothelial cells using transmission electron microscopy. The percentages of hexagonal endothelial cells and endothelial cell volume density were comparable with air-filled or with gas-filled eyes. The percentage of the superficial cells that appeared to be in the active turnover phase was significantly higher in the gas-filled eyes (16.5%) compared with the air-filled eyes (0.5%) at 18 hours after the intravitreal injection. Anterior chamber air endotamponade did not increase endothelial cell damage in the initial phases of the study, but the percentage of cells entering the stage of apoptosis was significantly higher in the gas-filled eyes compared with the air-filled eyes. Endothelial cell death was most pronounced in the superficial layer and in the center of the endothelial monolayer. The results show that gas-filled eyes exhibit a significantly higher proportion of cells in the early active turnover phase. Furthermore, endothelial cell apoptosis was observed in the central endothelial layer in the eyes with air endotamponade and at similar levels in the gas-filled eyes. Anterior chamber air endotamponade caused more endothelial cell damage than gas endotamponade.

the correlation between the band-shape and shape of the isolated transition state of a folding reaction in a peptide isomer. In the studies of the folding reaction of the homologous peptides, phenylalanine-2-proline-glycine-phenylalanine-alanine-alanine-phenylalanine (PPGGPAF) and phenylalanine-2-proline-glycine-phenylalanine-glycine-alanine-alanine-phenylalanine (PPGGPGA), the band-shape of the isolated transition state of the folding reaction can be very different from that of the isolated transition state of the folding reaction. Furthermore, it was observed that the transition state with large methyl group motion was destabilized. It is not easy to describe the characteristics of the isolated transition state of peptides by the criteria of the entire transition state of folding reactions. In this study, FTIR spectroscopy was used
