The main goal is to let the city grow over the years. You need to manage the population, production, storage, consumption and money. You can even have a double-income-structure by running a plant and a shop. As a mayor the tasks are not only managing the city, but also to gain as much technologies as You can. Starting with the basics like Food, Goods and Money, the game will get more difficult step by step as You level up. You can choose between: 2 Difficulty Levels (Tiny or Medium) 4 Game-Layers (Resources, Production, Consumption, Money) 25 Population Levels And also 4 different Game-Sides (Winning, Lose, Trading, Research) Lots of different Buildings and Generators Posted by kai So I finished this game. Only a few hours in but all I can say about it so far is its absolutely beautiful, and it has a really nice pace. So far I've definitely made the right choice in purchasing it; I absolutely love this little game. Now in terms of gameplay and mechanics, this game is definitely a classic economic simulator. You are given a simple economy to manage - resources for example which will have to be extracted from the ground, and you have a limited budget to build more production capacity in order to improve the economy of your city. You also have to manage your population which you gain over time as the resource deposits grow more. The most basic and focused task though are the resource production and consumptions, and fortunately the game does a good job of making these both very simple to understand and satisfying to look at, though if you manage to unlock advanced plots and buildings this can get more complex. But really for me, what makes this game stand out is its atmosphere and design, which is on par with the best little european games out there. The whole aesthetic is just so very beautiful - Everything is
