The disclosed method comprises the steps of generating a first signal representing the brightness of a battery and generating a second signal representing the brightness of the battery in response to a measuring voltage which drops with the current flow and the generation of the first signal. The measuring voltage is obtained by means of an integrating circuit which receives the power source voltage as its input. The first and second signals are compared with one another so as to obtain a difference signal which is proportional to the light level in the battery.
