Hair growth in mice: quantitative RT-PCR analysis of FGF5 mRNA in hair follicle regions. Fibroblast growth factor 5 (FGF5) is a secreted mitogen and morphogen. It is a member of a small family of extracellular growth factors that have been implicated in skin biology. The role of FGF5 in hair biology is largely unknown. Using a combination of in situ hybridization and real-time quantitative RT-PCR, we have analyzed FGF5 expression and distribution in the different regions of the hair follicle in mice. A significant difference between the two follicle stages in FGF5 expression was observed in the matrix and the bulb. In the matrix, this difference was even more pronounced than that observed for other FGFs. Further, an involvement of FGF5 in hair growth was suggested by the enhanced expression of the bulb marker, keratin 15, at the hair matrix stage in Fgf5-knockout mice compared with that in wild-type mice.
