Transient Receptor Potential Protein Transient receptor potential, ion channels (TRP) are a family of membrane proteins first discovered in Drosophila in 2000 by Tracey Nilius & Antonio Rigo as a family of non-selective cation channels that are mutated in a number of inherited disorders associated with temperature sensitivity [1-3]. Recently, human homologs of Drosophila TRPs were identified [4]. This family of proteins is found in organisms ranging from archaea to humans [5]. A thorough search on the human genome reveals more than 50 genes. So far only six have been well studied so far: six members of the TRP family named TRP1-TRP6 [6-8] (Schematic of TRP protein family described by Maruyama et al. [9]). TRP channel is a principal signaling mechanism and is comprised of six transmembrane segments called TRP domains, TRP domain is in an extracellular region and linked to the cytoplasmic side by four-helix bundles [10]. Domain 1 is composed of one to seven ankyrin repeats. The N terminal and C terminal domains contain TRP domain. TRP family proteins are non-selective cation channels. TRP2 plays a role in a number of ocular conditions including, glaucoma, proliferation of cells, regulation of epithelial cell growth, and differentiation. Although many TRP channels including TRP2 are involved in pain perception, the exact roles of most TRPs in the development of acute pain and chronic pain have not been studied well and remain unclear. TRP2 is a non-selective cation channel that is expressed in the skin and by sensory neurons in the periphery. It is activated by histamine, bradykinin, endothelin-1, 5-hydroxytryptamine, lysophosphatidic acid, and ATP [11]. TRP2 was shown to be involved in multiple biological functions, such as inflammation, mechanosensation, cell differentiation and proliferation, and regulation of blood pressure, thermoregulation, blood flow, and metabolism [11]. TRP2 plays a role in pain and the mechanism that is now known is these channels, TRP2 are sensitive to inflammatory mediators (bradykinin, PGE2, and substance P) and as a result, TRP2 stimulates the release of calcitonin gene-related

There are three levels of adjustment layers: Normal, Smart, and Expert. Each of these levels is independent of each other. By adjusting the Normal layer, you can make a copy of the Normal layer and make changes to that copy. You can change the "blend mode" of an image. There are several choices, including Color, Multiply, Screen, Darken, Lighten, and Mix. The Levels dialog box is useful for correcting color problems or adjusting the overall brightness of an image. To add a special effect to an image, you can use the Adjustment Layers tool. Choose Layer > New Adjustment Layer > and select the type of effect you want to add, such as Gradient or Levels. The Gradient tool is used to make smooth gradients. Simply click and drag in the image to create a gradient, or type a special code. To change the type of gradient you are creating, just click it with the Touch Up tool. As you paint in Photoshop, you can use the Brush tool. This allows you to easily create strokes, such as outlines or strokes to fill in areas of an image. The Pen tool is also useful for making shapes or creating outlines. The Pen tool is ideal for creating things like lettering, logos, and

You can also blend existing elements in your image with the mask. To make a simple geometric shape, use the "Rectangle" tool. The "Round Rectangle" tool creates the perfect circle. The Paths tool is great for creating complex free-form shapes. You can use paths to make designs or create a complex mask. You can use vector objects to create a line, curve, or shape. These objects retain their sharpness even if you zoom in and out of your image. This makes it possible to create intricate designs. The Paint Bucket can be used to select and fill areas in an image.
