When using Photoshop, keep in mind that the shortcuts on the keyboard are shortcuts and not commands. For instance, the way to get to the "File" menu is by pressing Command+N (not F). The short ways of clicking inside and outside the border are not commands. Also, to save a file, you must go to the File menu and choose Save As and give it a name, as shown in Figure 16-6. It's also very helpful to save the images as separate files, such as jpg, because then they can be sent to others to work on and can be used on Web sites. Photoshop is a powerful and complicated program, but with practice, you'll become very good at it. You'll be able to manipulate images in ways that no other image editing software or program can.

Although Photoshop has many features that enable such editing, it is relatively slow to work with, so be sure to have plenty of computer time available.

Figure 16-6: Photoshop enables you to create images by adding or changing objects, colors, and effects to an image.

Creating a 100 Watt Lamp If you were to go to a hardware store and buy a 100-watt lamp, you can use Photoshop to convert it into a different color, add clouds, and change the lighting for a striking effect. 1. Create a new image file in Photoshop at the size of 1600×2400 pixels and name it lamp.psd. 2. Create a new layer on top of the image and call it Color Overlay. 3. On this new layer, create a new color channel using the exact color of your lamp. The most common colors to use are white for pure white and black for pure black.

For instance, create a white channel. Figure 16-7 shows a 100-watt white lamp. Figure 16-7: Make lamps, words, and now--what else? Change the color of a lamp to a different color. 4. Resize the lamp so that it's smaller than the image. You need to resize the lamp so that it's smaller than the image so that it will fit the screen. You also can do this from the Layers panel, but to resize the lamp, you need to click on the layer and drag it to the right or left to scale it. 5. Zoom in to the layer containing the lamp. Z

Sam Starkey has pulled away in the 2-mile time trial of the Tour de France, and that'll mean he's out of the race. After five stages, he's already pulled more than 30 minutes off the leader's standings, despite suffering from the crash that took out Mark Cavendish on Stage Four. "I was a little surprised at how I did it," he told BBC Sport. "I've been out of work for four months, so it's good to be back on my bike, enjoy it, and see where I am. "It's good to get in the yellow jersey now and see what happens. It's a good position." 'I'm in a bit of a bubble' The 25-year-old from Epping, Essex, was among the earliest to take part in the time trial, which starts at 10:00 BST and also features Team Sky rider Geraint Thomas. "I'm in a bit of a bubble as the race is passing me by," he said. "I really have no idea how to react to what I am seeing, and I'm trying to stay in the bubble." Starkey slipped to the back of the pack in Stage Four when Cavendish - holding the yellow jersey - crashed, but he came back strongly to finish second in the previous stage's time trial. "That was a definite learning curve," he said of the crash. "You didn't know whether it was a clean finish or a crash. "I was just wondering why it was so close at the end when it should've been clear. I just cycled flat out and I found myself in second.

"The next stage should be a very interesting one. It could be won by anybody or nobody." He lost his Tinkoff team leader's jersey at the Tour de France last year, but has since been promoted to head the team. "I didn't expect to get the jersey off the front row, but it's not a surprise," he said. "They've worked their socks off for the whole Tour. "This team has come so far in one year. They have been good friends of mine for a long time
