No more searching fo...Saw a family of sea birds the other day. I've never seen these birds before. They had this huge triangular shaped tail that was being flapped around. I asked the biologist I was with and he said they were Fulmars. I have never read up on this bird before. Fulmars are a group of seabirds that are more closely related to shearwaters and storm petrels than to albatrosses. Fulmars probably first evolved in the Neogene, and diverged from shearwaters around 25-30 million years ago. It's hard to say which island they come from, since some islands aren't part of any subgroup. The name "Fulmar" comes from "fulmarus", which is a Latin word that means "one with a long, pointed or slender tail". The best photo that I've found is from the C-SPAN Nation Network website. Fulmars are found around the world and around the entire Atlantic Ocean. They are known to be capable of trans-oceanic flights. In the rare event of a stranding, they tend to be very adept at getting aa67ecbc25
