As part of this celebration the IHRD 2017 Research Exchange Meeting will take place from 17 to 19 November. In Bogotá the visit is being accompanied by an exhibition based on the theme "10 years in Quito: the aftermath of the peace agreement" which has already been staged in the Colombian capital. Colombia is known as a country with a high level of violence, which has always been closely connected to the violence against women. The criminalisation of women and gender based violence (GBV) represent a major challenge for the Colombian state, as they are a serious public health problem and extremely often under reported. Each year 28.4% of Colombian women report receiving or being threatened with physical violence by a partner. The same study also indicates that 47% of women in Colombia have suffered physical and/or sexual violence during their lifetime. Colombia has a relatively high incidence of aggravated sexual assault, which is often perpetrated by men who are close to their victims. Moreover, in 2014 the Colombian Congress approved a law aimed at criminalising femicide and to improve the investigation of crimes against women, representing a serious step forward in this area. There are 27,000 women living in Colombia who need urgent psychological help. This fact has been highlighted by the Quito International Development Cooperation for Women (CIDCO). In the case of women from vulnerable communities and groups, the incidence of GBV can be even higher.

In this context, IHRD will focus on the needs of the most vulnerable women –and girls- whose interventions it should be focused on. In Bogotá, the events to be held during the celebration of this international day include:
