This technology improves ball physics, ball control and movement, passing, shooting and scoring, saves and more. Players will benefit from improved close control in tight spots, accurate and more powerful shooting, and smarter decision making. How does it work? The AI system, dubbed "The Decision Engine," uses the collected data to process all player attributes and ball physics in real-time to model the actions of the current player and the ball, including shot trajectories, flight characteristics, swerving and spin. The Decision Engine is the system's heart, and it drives each of the over 300 micro-decisions that complete a FIFA player's action, including where the player will be looking, whether a pass is on or a pass is off, and where the ball will go when it's in the air. By processing all the data collected from all 22 athletes playing a full match, the Decision Engine correctly models each individual's ball and body movement to create realistic team and player physics, which in turn, leads to more authentic, accurate, fun and enjoyable gameplay for every player on the pitch. On the pitch, the Decision Engine includes FIFA players' individual attributes, including height, weight, race, position, speed, and stamina, as well as a representation of an opponent's team. The Decision Engine also makes adjustments for environmental conditions and player reactions. The Decision Engine works in real-time to generate micro-decisions. For example, it will include data about the weather conditions during a match, such as temperature, wind speed, time of day, light and shadow. The Decision Engine also models the relationship between a player's actions and the ball in relation to environmental conditions. For example, there might be a condition in which a player might deliberately lose a ball that may be retrievable or even catch up to the ball. In these types of situations, the Decision Engine will recognize that the player has lost control of the ball. This technology goes far beyond basic ball and player physics, it also models the true forces that shape your game, such as momentum, self-defense, anticipation, team positioning, teamwork, and decision-making. Another major improvement over last year's FIFA is that the entire game is affected by environmental variables, so changing the position of a player or where a pass is made will change the outcome of the game. For example,

Features Key:

- Real-world Player Motion
- Improved Match Engine
- Player Focus - let players focus on their own dribbling, shooting, crossing and heading. Move them out of the way and they can be unblocked
- Dual Sensors: Anticipation and Awareness
- Leading Light (TLOL): TLOL technology improves ball physics by analyzing all the lights' data captured by cameras.
- Displacement Map: Artificial intelligence helps with ball displacement in corners and free kicks. It makes it easier to control your team even in tight spaces.
- Defending POI & Vantage A.I.
- Defending: When a player performs an attack near a defending player, s/he will be worked into the defensive chain. This approach makes defending easy on offense and enables efficient positioning.
- Aerial Dribbles: Whether you're on the left or the right, every time you run in the same direction, your run will be highlighted by a 'X' on the pitch. This allows you to control your opponents. You can even perform a fake run to change direction
- Razor Edge: Roadie players don't get the advantage they used to have. If this happens, they will receive more-accurate shots; if this happens, they will be marked more. Thus, they are no longer the 'weakest link'.
- Runs on the wings: While you're running, your runs are no longer counted as 'in bounds', allowing for the best control of the pitch.
- Off the ball running animations: Running will look much more aggressive, thanks to a better animation design. Running will also look more natural and more fluid. In response to complaints about tight spaces, you'll be able to run on more open areas. When defending, you can run in the same direction as the ball carrier. When you're running, you'll receive verbal instructions. Additionally, you will eventually receive automatic instructions.
- Run on the same foot in the same direction: When you run, you will instinctively have the joystick on the same foot as when you dribble. Running with
