The game engine will now also be able to use situational data collected from the teams that compete in the World Cups, the Confederations Cups and other major national or international competitions. Of course, FIFA has always been about more than just on-pitch action. Players can now compete for the FIFA Ultimate Team™, compete in the FIFA World Cup™, compete in the FIFA Women’s World Cup™, and even compete in the FIFA eWorld Cup. The latter is an online tournament where 50,000 players from around the world can compete online for their chance to win FIFA Ultimate Team™ packs, which include exclusive FIFA Ultimate Team™ players. There’s also the chance to earn in-game rewards or win real-life prizes by competing in these tournaments. How can you win? Players can also win FIFA Ultimate Team™ packs through other in-game events. Users can win five Ultimate Team™ packs by playing a single game during the FIFA World Cup™. To earn one Ultimate Team™ pack, users need to finish in the top 100 in a single game, while finishing in the top 10 in two games will earn users a World Cup pack. That will be one pack for the winners of each respective group. FIFA Ultimate Team™ packs can be purchased online. Getting the Ultimate Team™ Pack through FIFA eWorld Cup™ tournaments is a little different. If a player wins through qualifying, he or she will receive a voucher, which contains a 100 FIFA eWorld Cup™ card.
