Over and Go to Supermax," designed to commit as many people as possible to the supermax U.S. penitentiary in Florence, Colorado. In recent months, these activities have been quieted, and a public debate has begun. But at the time, the early part of Obama's second term, the Justice Department's special counsel and two assistant U.S. attorneys, Michael DiPiero and Michael Trader, were busy investigating what the Bureau of Prisons referred to as "an organized effort to tamper with a witness in a federal prosecution." The co-conspirator, of course, was Samuel Fouts, a con man and Federal Bureau of Prisons employee who had bragged on his radio show, "The Big Sam Show," that he had bought out the Bureau's entire supply of the sedative Halcion, which Fouts claimed made it possible to "go through the roof" for an inmate. He offered his purchases to prisoners and promised to work the meds into their meals. In mid-2015, while this conspiracy was in progress, the "Drive Over and Go to Supermax" scheme was already being implemented. Though the prison receives first priority in operations, the Bureau of Prisons also is required to make facilities available for federal court trials, particularly multi-defendant trials and trials of high-profile, high-priority cases. According to the Bureau of Prisons website, there are only two facilities that can accommodate the kind of situation that the Justice Department prosecutors faced
