10..Practicing ESD can be a lot of fun. Whether you're making a police car, a clown, a scary creature, or a monster from a movie you want to emulate the effects in the best way possible. Besides the obvious advantages of having a good camera and good tools, ESD is one of the most important skills in video editing. That said, you should always make sure that you're using a device that's suited to your project. If you're making a real-life cop car, then you're going to want something that's light and easy to handle. If you're going to be using a lot of ESD effects, then you'll want something that's built for that too. To make yourself a kind of professional, you may want to consider a lens with a built in ESD control. However, that doesn't mean you have to spend a lot of money. There are still ways to do it without breaking text? I am using Emacs and GNU Emacs 24.2.1 (x86_64-apple-darwin11.3.0, NS apple-appkit-1038.36). I am trying to find all substrings where a pattern lies in the middle of the substring. I was thinking of using match-string. However, I don't know how to write regular expressions for this. Can you please help? For example, I would like to match the following cases: aabbccdde aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa

aaaaaaaa aaaaa* abc abc* abc aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa A: 1) A pattern like `^.?(\w*).?(.?)\1.?$` seems to do the trick. Note that this regex is case sensitive. See demo on regex101. 2) To prevent matching the beginning/end of the string, you can use `[^\w][^\w]` at the start/end of the pattern, and repeat them as often as needed: `^\w^\w*$` 3) Since you do not need the 1st group, you can replace the `\1` (content matched

as the 1st group) by $1. var =
"aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa"; var2
= "aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa"; var3 =
"aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa*"; var4 =
"abc"; var5 6d1f23a050
