A new class of bisimidazolylidene-ruthenium(II) complexes bearing N-unsubstituted tetra-1,3-perylenebisimidazolylidene ligands were prepared. Their near-infrared (NIR) luminescence properties were studied, which exhibited exceptionally good luminescent properties such as larger Stokes shifts and higher quantum yields in the presence of chloride counterions.Photorefractive keratoplasty (PRK) was first described in 1976 in an attempt to correct nearsightedness. After the discovery of corneal rings, the procedure gained new popularity. In 1981, the first human case was reported and the procedure quickly gained widespread acceptance. Today, PRK is one of the most common refractive surgical techniques, with approximately four million cases performed worldwide. Two competing types of PRK surgery are currently used: the Dresden technique and the predominant LASIK technique. In the Dresden technique, an excimer laser is used to remove tissue in a series of cuts or “flaps”
