Exposure of the eggs of the freshwater torpedo worm, Mastigocladus lupus, to sublethal concentrations of copper ion (0.5, 1.0 and 2.0 mg l(-1)) caused an early-stage death of embryos and yolk accumulation within the eggs. However, sulfate ions were present throughout the early cleavage stages, and the sulfate level decreased during the cleavage stages. Whole-cell sulfate accumulation was noted even in sulfate-starved embryos. The amounts of cytoplasmic sulfates were reduced by about 90% in embryos that survived exposure to 1.0 mg l(-1) of copper. Cytoplasmic sulfate levels of embryos that survived exposure to 2.0 mg l(-1) of copper were reduced by about 65%. After cell death, an extruded yolk-rich cell underwent progressive retraction to form a large yolk sac. These results indicate that M. lupus probably scavenges sulfate by using the yolk sac after the termination of embryonic cleavage. The changes in cytoplasmic sulfate levels occurred earlier in 1.0 mg l(-1) copper-exposed embryos than in controls, indicating that the sulfate levels were significantly affected by exposure to 0.5 mg l(-1) copper. The embryo cells of copper-exposed embryos showed an abnormal cell behavior, including abnormal localization of the nuclei, early in the division stage, and complete and extensive cytoplasmic splitting in the late division stage, and the splitting continued throughout incubation. These abnormal cell behaviors were often observed in M. lupus eggs exposed to 1.0 and 2.0 mg l(-1) copper. The early cytoplasmic splitting of copper-exposed embryos was suppressed by pre-incubation of eggs in 1

But now, with the widespread use of EKGs in the general population, a true epidemic of atrial fibrillation appears to be taking place. That's worrisome to say the least, as there are no good
