Prince Henry's mother died six months later, but he made up for lost time and was only 8 when his sister Princess Caroline turned 4. Prince Henry was the apple of Caroline's eye. He was considerate, gallant, intelligent and very charming. He received a good education and was educated in France. He had a bad stammer, but his great uncle, King George IV, tried to encourage him and took him to the opera and to public appearances. The royal family were very protective of their offspring and Princess Caroline's father, the King, wanted Prince Henry to marry a girl of good family and fortune. He also wanted him to be the heir to the throne. Prince Henry and Princess Caroline were blessed. After a few years, Princess Caroline gave birth to a healthy baby girl. They named her Caroline-Leopoldine. The King was very happy because the couple had kept Caroline's promise and they had a second daughter who was to be the future queen. At the age of 17, Prince Henry was still living in St. James' Palace, and he took part in a celebration at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, as a guest of the Duke of Cumberland, the King's nephew and a possible heir to the throne. Prince Henry was very popular with the public. He received his first public electoral vote from the citizens of London on August 7, 1784. He left London and went to Brighton, where 6d1f23a050
